Frequently Asked Questions

What is included in the assessment process, and how long does it take?

Our comprehensive assessments typically involve:

- Initial Consultation: clinical interview to determine assessments
- Standardised testing sessions
- Behavioural questionnaires (as appropriate)
- Teacher questionnaire (where appropriate)
- A feedback session to discuss results
- A detailed written report with findings and recommendations

The length of the full process depends on the assessment package and the age of the participant.

Will I receive a formal diagnosis and a report that can be used for school, work, or NDIS?

Yes. If the assessment results meet diagnostic criteria, your report will include a formal diagnosis and specific recommendations. Our reports are suitable for school or workplace accommodations, NDIS applications, and other support services.

Can I claim any of the assessment fees through Medicare or private health insurance?

Most assessment services are not covered by Medicare unless part of a specific plan (e.g., Helping Children with Autism or a Chronic Disease Management Plan). However, some private health funds may provide a rebate—please check directly with your provider.

How do I know whether I need an ADHD, ASD, or general cognitive assessment?

If you're unsure, we recommend starting with an initial consultation. In this session, the psychologist will explore your concerns and guide you towards the most suitable assessment for your needs.

Why do you include a cognitive assessment with an ADHD and ASD assessments?

A cognitive assessment helps clarify whether challenges like inattention or social difficulties are due to ADHD, autism, or other learning or developmental differences. It provides objective data that supports accurate diagnosis and helps distinguish between conditions. The results also guide practical supports by showing how the individual learns best and what strategies may help them thrive.
